

The New York Times

March 21, 2007 edition

Juice Boxes, the Adult Kind

Should you crave something stronger than apple juice or chocolate milk to go into your box lunch, there are now individual Tetra Pak boxes of wine. Three Thieves Bandit wines from California — a refreshingly tart pinot grigio and a fruity, young cabernet sauvignon — are being sold in handy 250-milliliter boxes (about 8.5 ounces), in packs of two and four. There is also a white zinfandel that may be drinkable, very cold, at the beach in a couple of months.

All that's missing is a straw. They are sold at Best Cellars in Manhattan in packs of two ($6) or four ($12). A pack of four sells for $7.49 at Red White & Bubbly in Park Slope, Brooklyn, and for $10 at threethieves.com.

-Florence Fabricant

Tony Cenicola/The New York Times